

Jump, Fall, Fly

Could Children be Happier?

"You are doing amazing things with your kids and inspiring others."

After a 10 year journey that has taken them half way around the world and from being traditional schooling focused parents to radical alternative education advocates authors Lehla and Anthony say a resounding Yes!

Based on their book, they show how giving up the very things we think are best for our children's future and embracing ideas that seem to fly in the opposite direction, children and parents can become happier, more relaxed and better equipped to master the fast evolving (and fast approaching) future.

That future has immense challenges not least those of our changing ecological systems and climate. They show how the best way to tackle these challenges and opportunities for the future lie in developing a free mind, creativity and emotional intelligence.

Key Takeaways:

- The 7 Keys to focus on when living and caring for children that will make happiness more likely
- How to spot the three behaviours that rob children of autonomy, confidence and curiosity
- How to know what habits to build and which ones to give up when caring for kids so as to prime them for joy
- The elements of family rhythm (focus, relationships, energy, stimuli, time)
- The best way to tackle the reality of social conflict, ecological challenges and suffering
- The five kinds of conversations you need to have for healthy family collaboration

Unschooling the Parents

"What an amazing read! It's not often a book makes you rethink essential concepts, foundational principles and core beliefs like "Jump, Fall, Fly". I was delighted, entertained, stimulated and challenged on a topic that could have easily been dry or ordinary."

No matter how much love you have and how much you want the best for children and young people the biggest barrier to bringing about change is all about..... you!

This is good news because changing yourself is much easier than changing everyone else!

In this talk you will learn the practical ways to recognise where you can make quick and positive changes by changing yourself. This releases confidence, passion and hope in you and this has benefits for everyone.

We show how bringing about a positive environment for children and young people is not about what they do but about what you do. Whatever your educational and learning choices are (and we do not advocate you do what we have done and abandon the whole system) your children's outcomes will be improved if, first and foremost, stress is managed, and joy is nurtured.

Key Takeaways:

- How to spot when it is time to change yourself and not the kids
- How to spot the three assassins that rob people of freedom to learn
- Why you are a much better parent than you often think you are and how to use the 'wedge' principle toolkit
- How to use storytelling to inspire yourself and your kids to dream big dreams and let go of the past
- How to live your life from a meaning centred place inside you that connects you and your kids to community and positive action.

inspirational and just so damn good!!"*

Entrepreneurship

What Unschooling Children Can Teach us!

We want entrepreneurs to be successful. Not least because entrepreneurs are providing some of the much needed ways we can solve some of our social and environmental challenges.

There are no absolutes but entrepreneurial success rests on a mix of influences, character traits, psychological background and luck.

Drawing on almost a decade long journey of raising their children to be free and unschooled Lehla and Anthony Eldridge-Rogers will show how re-examining the process of learning, schooling and the relationship with teachers and carers can help entrepreneurs unlock more of the vital skills they need to succeed and organisations to foster the entrepreneurial spirit to drive business success.

In this talk you'll discover how to develop the core drivers of the will to entrepreneurship. (courage, discrimination, empathy, a 'no' voice, stubbornness, flexibility, purpose, and compromise).

How people who develop this 'will' are impervious to the shame of failure for they define it themselves despite convention and herd thinking. This allows fast recovery and stimulates creativity.

We will explore the ways that how we learned as children can both improve our chances of success in setting up our own enterprises and can also be a barrier. We will also explore and learn what we can all do to foster the entrepreneurial spirit by harnessing meaning and purpose.

Key Takeaways:

- How entrepreneurship is naturally occurring in all of us and what three things bury it deep in our childhoods
- How and when to rebel against systems and why we should foster rebellion in businesses and organisations, especially in the next 10 years
- Why successful entrepreneurs are not the smartest people in the room and don't want to be
- Why entrepreneurs don't mind failing too much
- Why insane curiosity is both the entrepreneurs best but riskiest asset

Our Audiences (who should come?)

When it comes to education and learning we know this is a topic that concerns us all as well it ought as it defines the future. That said, we are particularly keen to spend our time talking to Parents, Parents to be, Educators, so Teachers and Lecturers and those active in the institutions (both existing and new) involved in learning.

In addition to that, having spent most of our lives as project and business creators (aka Entrepreneurs) we also share insight into how to foster entrepreneurial traits in young people and adults both within and outside the work environment.

We have a talk for Entrepreneurs and Business Managers and owners. Especially the ones really looking to develop new era organisations, triple bottom line businesses and non profit projects.
